Biography

Allan Wallace was a television and radio advance man for the 1960 Nixon campaign for President. His duties included all the elements of preparing the Vice President for his appearances, including preceding him to the location of meetings; coordinating lighting, cameras, audio, time-allotments, and program content; and even occasionally providing make-up assistance for Mr. Nixon's campaign appearances. The collection consists of campaign memorabilia, itineraries, and sketches of campaign locations providing details of the 33,000 miles (and 34 stops) that Mr. Wallace covered while working as an advance man during the 1960 Presidential campaign.

Scope and Content Summary: Materials from the 1960 Presidential Campaign, including personal calendars, detailed itineraries, sketches of locations, correspondence with television stations, and outlines for television and radio appearances. Also included are news clippings, press releases, and a transcript of Mr. Nixon's televised speech against Mr. Kennedy.
