PERSONAL

The Honorable H.R. Haldeman
Assistant to the President
The White House
Washington, D.C. 20000

Dear Bob:

Your U.S. News and World Report interview was interesting and informative to the public, and very well done. I particularly liked your response to the question concerning the volume of mail to the President (p. 62). The final answer in the interview is, I think, of maximum importance. It is also accurate as can be.

Regarding the campaign, I was called recently by Dick Burress, who told me that the Vice President's plane was "full," and that there were already enough "speechwriters." I thought that odd, especially since I have not in the past functioned as a "speechwriter," although the job of foreign policy advisor did occasionally entail the production of finished materials.

Anyway, should the need arise, I will of course be willing to help. That was the purpose of my offer when you and I first discussed the matter on the White House lawn during the summer.

With best regards,

Sincerely,

Richard V. Allen
Vice President

Dear Bob:

The Vice President generated considerable static at the Murphy fund-raising dinner in Los Angeles last week with his highly personalized attack on Larry O'Brien. I received a number of calls from some of our most staunch friends complaining that the Vice President's remarks were not only rude and unfair, but inaccurate as well.

You probably read the coverage in "The Los Angeles Times", but I believe it would be helpful to review it once again. With all of the obvious political ammunition available to us from this source, why do we persist in this type of character assassination which is the height of bad taste and is sure to do us damage in the long run?

This sort of attack mitigates against everything constructive the President and this Administration is trying to accomplish. Further, we are wasting and eroding a strong and vital resource in the Vice President with this type of obvious and unnecessary contrivance.

Sincerely,

Clifford A. Miller

Dear Bob:

Our invitation to last Thursday's State Dinner at the White House has improved my personal relations at home substantially, for which I am most grateful. Barbara had a marvelous time and has talked of nothing else since. It was her first visit to the White House and she was thoroughly delighted and impressed with the charm and conviviality of our gracious hosts.

Those responsible for managing social events at the White House are indeed deserving of commendation based on my observations of last Thursday. The relaxed atmosphere and attention to detail was most impressive.

We enjoyed ourselves immensely and want to thank you for thinking of us.

Cordially,

Clifford A. Miller
