Hofstra University Nixon Symposium: Opening Session and the First Plenary Session ("The Opening to China") (12/27/1987, Hempstead, NY)

Elliot Richardson delivers the first address of the conference in which he comments on Nixon's personality, his qualifications for the presidency, his political philosophy, and foreign policy. The succeeding speaker, Hugh Sidey, relays his recollections of Nixon followed by Stephen Ambrose's address comparing and contrasting Eisenhower and Nixon. The next speaker, Ambassador Han Xu, compares U.S.-Chinese relations before and since Nixon's 1972 visit and discusses leadership qualities of Nixon and the Chinese leaders. The next speaker, Robert Sutter, lectures on geopolitical conditions leading to U.S.-Sino rapprochement and the risks taken by Chinese and U.S. government leaders to achieve it. Sutter's address is followed by comments from discussants Jerome Cohen, Kenneth Lieberthal, and C.L. Sulzberger. Cohen concentrates on the legal ramifications of Nixon's China diplomacy--China's status in the United Nations, the territorial status of Taiwan, and other nations' recognition of the Chinese government(s). Sulzberger comments on Nixon's experience in foreign affairs, the development of his interest in China, and geopolitical conditions making the Nixon visit possible. Lieberthal presents his view of issues relevant to contemporary and future Sino-U.S. relations. The session ends with questions from the audience. (00:00:00-03:20:00)

Hofstra University Nixon Symposium: "Appointments to the Supreme Court" and Impeachment Proceedings" (12/29/1987, Hempstead, NY)

The first presenter in "Impeachment Proceedings," Dagmar Hamilton, distinguishes the proceedings of the House Judiciary Committee from the investigations by the special prosecutor and the Committee On Presidential Campaign Activities (Senate Watergate Committee) and gives special attention to Article II, concerning abuse of power, among the five articles of impeachment. The second presenter, Terry Sullivan, evaluates the following three characterizations about the impeachment process using head-count data from the majority leader's office: support for impeachment among members of Congress built up over time, members of Congress became concerned about the balance of power between the executive and legislative branches, and the system of checks and balances worked. Sullivan's address is followed by comments from discussants John Doar, Elizabeth Holtzman, and Judge Charles Wiggins. Doar discusses considerations involved in presenting information to the Judiciary Committee and how the committee defined impeachable offenses. Holtzman concentrates on the decision of the Speaker of the House to choose the Judiciary Committee to conduct impeachment hearings, the attitude of committee members toward the proceedings, the decision to televise the proceedings, the definition of impeachment, and the committee's failure to pass an article of impeachment on the bombing of Cambodia. Judge Charles Wiggins examines the historical antecedents to the doctrine of impeachment, its rejection of a standard for abuse of power, and evidence for articles of impeachment I (obstruction of justice), II (abuse of power), and III (refusal to respond to congressional subpoenas). Questions from the audience follow both sessions.

Runtime: 3:45:00

Participants: "Appointments to the Supreme Court"-- Bernard Jacob (Hofstra Law School professor), presenter Joseph Callouri (attorney), discussants Birch Bayh (attorney and former senator from Indiana), John MacKenzie (The New York Times), James B.
