

Evenings at the White House

Scope and Content Note

The Nixon Library has compiled the following list of textual materials, photos, and recordings relating to “Evenings at the White House.”

First Lady Pat Nixon instituted and served as hostess to “Evenings at the White House.” These events featured performances by popular and beloved entertainers that honored various forms of music, comedy, dance and the arts. The first official “Evening at the White House” occurred on January 29, 1970 and featured Red Skelton. These events also served to honor special topics and persons. Glen Campbell’s performance on May 7, 1971 was a “Salute to Agriculture” and on March 17, 1971, Irish Prime Minister John Lynch was honored and entertained with a performance by the Shannon Castle Entertainers. President Nixon and First Lady Pat Nixon would continue to host (approximately) eight more “Evenings at the White House” events with featured entertainers and personalities like Johnny Cash, David Frost, and Sammy Davis Jr. The last “Evening at the White House” occurred on March 17, 1973 and featured musical performances by Merle Haggard and Sonny Osborne. The White House Social Entertainments Office, led by Sanford Fox and Lucy Winchester, was responsible for conducting these events, and was often assisted by Rose Mary Woods, President Nixon’s personal and executive secretary.

The selected textual collections primarily detail the planning process behind “Evenings at the White House” and include various RSVPs, guest lists, and schedules of events. In addition are selected photographs, videos and recordings of “Evenings at the White House.” Of particular note are thank you letters from President Nixon to these featured entertainers and letters from entertainers thanking the President. Additionally, there are RSVPs from other invited celebrities and entertainers, as well as special requests from entertainers regarding their performances.

The resources listed have also been broadened in order to include other entertainers and celebrities who either performed at or attended state dinners and other White House functions. In addition, recorded conversations on the White House tapes regarding “Evenings at the White House”, entertainment and celebrities have also been included. The first state dinner of the Nixon Administration honored Canadian Prime Minister Pierre E. Trudeau on March 24, 1969 and featured Robert Goulet. The Nixon Administration would continue to feature prominent entertainers at their state dinners such as Frank Sinatra, Peter Nero, and the 5th Dimension. Of particular note is the White House Social Entertainment’s Office catalog of every notable celebrity and athlete who was invited to or attended White House functions during Nixon’s presidency.

This subject guide seeks to list resources that show:

- The planning and execution process behind “Evenings at the White House” and other White House events with featured entertainers.

- “Evenings at the White House” as a way in which the Nixon Administration honored traditions of music, comedy, dance and the arts.
- President Nixon’s contact and communications with prominent entertainers and celebrities.
- Photos and other audiovisual materials which document these events.
