The 1952 "Fund Speech" mail consists of 300,000 pieces of public mail sent in reply to Richard Nixon's request for listener response to the question of whether or not he ought to stay on the Republican Presidential ticket in 1952. These records are located in the Federal Records Center at Bell, California. Their ownership is unclear. Their volume is approximately 100 linear feet.

SECURITY-CLASSIFIED MATERIAL, 1953-1960

This material was reviewed by Brigadier General Robert E. Cushman, Jr. He found that the bulk of the papers were originated by various agencies and individuals and that, in consequence, he could not declassify any material authored outside of his own agency (C. I. A.). For this reason he made recommendations about the maintenance or discontinuance of the classification accorded each item, but the files, in essence, remain classified and closed. The Department of State, or employees thereof, classified more papers than any other agency. The notations in the left hand column designate whether the document is to remain classified and retained (C & R) or should be declassified and retained (D & R). Of the total 475 items, General Cushman recommended that only 49 documents be declassified.

General Cushman recommends three possible alternatives for handling these documents:

- a. Treat them as Presidential papers and incorporate them into any Presidential Library material for review and declassification as may be determined through the Library system.
- b. Treat them in the same manner as National Security Council papers. While here again there is no existing mechanism to declassify these, the matter is under consideration by an interdepartmental group headed by the Office of Legal Counsel to the Attorney General.
- c. A committee might be convened under White House auspices, composed of a member from each of the agencies which have authored the papers, to decide upon declassification or not, as appropriate.
