November 10, 1970

MEMORANDUM FOR

JOHN EHRLICHMAN

Following are my thoughts on the questions raised in Bob Haldeman's recent memorandum.

I. Analysis of the President's Election Efforts

The schedule of Presidential participation was particularly good as the President was able to cover a great deal of ground without appearing to devote a significantly lesser amount of time to governing.

Considering the odds, there is no question in my mind that the President's participation was the major factor in the GOP winning any seats in the Senate and holding losses in the House to a minimum. Gubernatorial races were not a part of the plan and therefore not a factor for evaluation.

We appear through the public media to have done poorly because either we got prematurely carried away (Sept.) with favorable public predictions or the press set us up. (We made this possible because of a high degree of campaign activity).

I view the total campaign as an off-year return to the center. Hence, wins in the Northeast, losses in the ~~Senate~~ South and West.

We ran a negative campaign - against Democrats, not for Republicans and I frankly think not for the President. Therefore, where we could credibly paint our opposition as a "radic-lib" or bad guy - we won. Where we couldn't we lost. Our success wasn't based on short-term communications ability, but rather rested with the opposition candidate himself. If overtime he had built the kind of record we were claiming for him, the public believed us and recognized it was time for a change. (Gore, Tydings, Goodell) Where we tried to paint the opposition as something the public couldn't credibly perceive we lost.
