THE 1971 NATIONAL CHRISTMAS TREE

On December 16, 1971, the Vice President threw the switch lighting the National Christmas Tree and opening the 17th annual Pageant of Peace in The President's Park in Washington, D.C.

The 65-foot Fraser Fir, a gift from the people of North Carolina, was illuminated with 15,000 lights. Lining the "Pathway of Peace" were 57 twelve-foot Balsam Fir trees, each representing one of the 50 states and territories. The small tree standing significantly alone in front of the main tree was dedicated to our Prisoners of War and Missing-In-Action in Southeast Asia.

The Hallmark logo, featuring a crown above the word "Hallmark" in a cursive script.

Dear Frank:

I greatly appreciated your letter of November 29. After such a momentous victory the messages that mean the most are those that come from old friends. As I have told mutual friends, had it not been for the support the Times gave me when I was a very young Congressman in 1950 I would never have gone forward to seek the nomination for the Senate, and would not have been elected to the position I presently hold.

These are rough days for Norman I know, but he is a strong man and his fine character will shine through even more than ever during this period.

With every good wish for the New Year,

Sincerely,

Dr. Franklin D. Murphy

HE water color of the wild Chincoteague ponies and our camp on Assateague Island, Maryland, was painted from a photograph taken in June 1951.

Legend says that the ponies found running wild here and on the neighboring island of Chincoteague are descended from Moorish ponies or horses, survivors of a Spanish galleon wrecked off the islands in the Atlantic.

A few unromantic skeptics claim that the early colonial farmers on the mainland placed their surplus horses on the islands to avoid high taxes and that the wild ponies are actually local horses stunted in growth from the diet of marsh grass. Undoubtedly, their American history goes back 150 years irrespective of their origin.

In mid-summer the townspeople of Chincoteague, Virginia, hold a "pony-penning" which has developed into quite a carnival. Scores of local horsemen "round-up" the branded ponies and colts on the Island of Assateague, and swim them over to join the ones on Chincoteague. People come from far and near to buy the colts for their children as they make sturdy and dependable riding ponies after they have matured and are broken.

Dear Nick:

The Monte Cruz cigars which you sent to me for Christmas brought back some pleasant memories of those days that we travelled through the boon docks in California seeking the Gubernatorial seat in 1962. As I have often said since then, thank God we didn't win!

I shall always be grateful for your loyal friendship through the years.

With best wishes for the New Year,

Sincerely,

Mr. L. Nicholas Ruwe
